The Philippine Association of Plastic, Reconstructive and Aesthetic Surgeons

The Philippine Association of Plastic, Reconstructive and Aesthetic Surgeons, or PAPRAS had its humble beginnings on March 22, 1961. It was founded by eight renowned plastic surgeons, trained internationally across America and Europe.

Today, the society has rightfully assumed its role as the key opinion leader as far as cosmetic and reconstructive surgery issues in the country are concerned, disseminating relevant information to the public through print and broadcast media. It has also continued to serve the underserved public sectors through its numerous plastic surgical missions and outreach programs.

The PAPRAS has likewise stamped its class in the international front through its members who have either been actively participating in international meetings or have become active in international organizations, gaining international accolades in various international congresses over the years.
